Miss Roop Marries Hebron Professor

Elon Stanley Kitchin of Palermo, instructor of mathematics and coach of winter sports at Hebron Academy, and Miss Lorene Estelle Roop, dean of girls and instructor of French at Gould Academy, were married Saturday afternoon at the home of Rev. Mr. Woodcock in Kingfield. Mrs. Robert Waugh, twin sister of the bride, acted as matron of honor and Robert Waugh, instructor at Hebron Academy, was best man. Others present were the minister's family and Miss Lucille Simpson, instructor at Gould Academy.

The bride wore a simple afternoon dress of sea-worthy blue crepe, trimmed with silver, with a grey velvet hat and gray accessories. Her shoulder corsage was of sunburst and cream tea roses. Mrs. Waugh's dress was of midnight blue velvet and erer. Her corsage was of gardenias.

Following the ceremony Mr. and Mrs. Kitchin and Miss Simpson were guests of Mr. and Mrs. Waugh at dinner at the Exchange Hotel, Farmington.

Mr. Kitchin is the son of Elon Sanborn Kitchin of Palermo. He is a graduate of Colby College, where he was a member of the Kappa Delta Rho fraternity. ## EDWARD N. ROBERTSON

Edward Norris Robertson passed away this (Thursday) afternoon at 1:45 at his home on Paradise Street after a long illness. He suffered a shock on July 21, 1936, and had never recovered.

He was born in Bethel Dec. 2, 1862, the son of Moses and Sarah Stowell Robertson. He was educated in the local schools and at Gould Academy. He learned the trade of house and carriage painter which he followed several years. He then entered the employ of the Grand Trunk Railway as brakeman and six years later became conductor, holding this position 33 years until he retired in 1929. Since then he has been associated with his oldest son, Frank, in the operation of a service station on Railroad Street.

He married Miss Cora Alice Buck of Bethel who survives. He also leaves two sons, Frank of Bethel and Percy of Waterbury, Conn.; five grandchildren, O'Neill, Edward and Carol Robertson of Bethel, Shirley and Herbert Robertson of Waterbury; a brother, W. S. Robertson, and cousin, Miss Maria Robertson, both of Bethel. Another son, Fred, died a few years ago.

He was a member of the Knights of Pythias and the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen.

Mr. Robertson enjoyed the confidence and respect of all who knew him, and in his passing the family has the sympathy of all.

Funeral services will be held at the Greenleaf funeral home at 2:30 Sunday afternoon. Burial will be in Woodlawn cemetery.

GOULD 41--OXFORD 18

Gould Academy had little difficulty winning its first Western Maine Conference game. Oxford put up a great battle during the first period, leading the locals 7-4, mainly through the efforts of their star forward Grover. After the initial period the "Blue and Gold" quint started clicking, tying up the score early in the second stanza and then going out in front 16 to 9 at the half way mark.

The entire second half was a runaway with Johnson and Robertson doing a great job of basket tossing. Wentzel, Palmer and Holt also helped produce Gould's total of 41 points. Grover was the star man for the losers, scoring 12 of his team's 18 points.

In an exciting preliminary game the Gould and Oxford girls played to a 27 to 27 tie. The tie was not played off.

As Dorothy Thompson wrote a few weeks ago, "The capacity of this country to weather another depression, before the serious social, economic and political effects of the last one have worn off, is one great big question mark." It is this "question mark" which is perhaps the most unsettling factor in the current situation. Industrial production has widely declined. Securities are coming the price depths. Business' sentiment is even worse than the business production figures—principally, because of doubt as to the future, and fear of what the coming months may bring. In other words, the statistics are bad—but the imponderables, such as investor psychology, are a great deal worse. It is this tremendously important factor which makes the post-September drop something different than just another recession in a long-pull recovery movement. And it is this which is responsible for the amazing variety of present-day forecasts as to the trend of coming events. One school, including government officials and other New Deal partisans, tends to minimize the recession so far as possible, and to make it seem less severe than it actually is. Another school, which includes those who are exceedingly opposed to all the acts and objectives of the administration, tries to make the picture even darker than it is. To try to strike the happy medium, between the apostles of sweetness and light on the one hand, and the bearers of the blackest tidings on the other is the tough job that confronts any analyst today.

First, some facts. The country has not yet felt the full brunt of the drop, though more and more of the impact is becoming visible daily. The employment situation will be grave this winter. During October, about 100,000 workers were laid off. During November, the number reached 400,000, according to the best estimates obtainable at the time this is written. During December, it seems inevitable that a still larger number of workers will be divorced from payrolls, and forced to look for non-existent jobs; to subsist for a time on savings, which in the great majority of instances are pitifully small, and finally to seek relief or charity. The Christmas buying period, with its acceleration in retail trade, will keep the unemployment rolls from growing on a big scale this month in all probability, but the full effects will be felt in January.

Loss of employment has not occurred evenly in all industries. According to a U. S. News survey, the personal service industries, which include domestic and professional help, employ today about as many people as in 1929. A major continued drop in industrial production would obviously be felt in a sharp reduction of employment in this bracket.

Trade, distribution and finance today employ more workers than in 1929.

Construction, however, has made up only one-fifth of its losses since 1929, on the basis of figures which do not take fully into account the current recession. The transportation industries are far under their pre-depression employment levels. The public utilities have recovered only about one-third of their depression employment losses. Figures for the manufacturing industries are too uncertain to be quoted—the employment total of even a week or two ago is likely to be extremely high as against the employment total of even a week or two hence, as it is manufacturing which first feels a drop in consumption, and is able to first trim its sails to meet the storm.

In all the industries mentioned, with the possible exceptions of transportation and the utilities, employment will continue to drop until the recession is ended. Some forecasters are pessimistic enough to foresee a rise in unemployment to the worst depression level, when it touched 12,000,000. One thing seems certain—it will be impossible for the Federal government to stay out of the relief field on a big scale, and to continue the retrenchment policy begun in the early fall. The effects would be too severe. The feeling is growing in industrial quarters that, much as a balanced budget is needed, the time for relief economy must be put off.

Now, some theories. How long will the recession last? A few economists fear that it cannot be checked, and will result in another long major depression, perhaps culminating in an actual panic. The bulk of the experts think that the downturn can be checked early this winter, and turned into an up-turn in late January or early February. Congress will take certain remedial steps in the direction of tax reform, and a more friendly attitude toward industry. This was also the opinion of the nation's leading bankers in replying to a recent questionnaire—they forecast that the slump would run on four months, but not develop into another depression.

Proposals to turn the tide are now brewing in Congress. Whether this trend comes to anything will be seen shortly. Congress can't do it all—but it is generally believed that tangible legislative action, especially in the tax field, would provide the necessary steam to get the industrial engines turning again.

It is not too late to order a gift subscription to the Citizen for the coming year.

I been readin' where a young feller who is 17, let his car get away from him, and busted a hydrant, and it took a crew of men to shut off the geyser, and it was at 4 A. M.

And with this 17 year old gosling was a girl, 15.

And some people will condemn the 17 and the 15 year olds, but they are barkin' up the wrong tree. And the ones mostly to blame, it is the two moms and the two pops of these youngsters who were out at 4 A. M.

And if this foursome does not see that their off-spring is home before sun-up, they could use a guardian too, and were maybe out 'til three-thirty themselves.

And if there is nobody to curb a colt, he will sure grow up to be a wild horse, and useless—and nothing to be proud of. But boys and girls, they will be O. ### WHAT HAS GONE BEFORE:

Returning from a marital vacation during which he played poker with his old gang (the wife, Lucy, was told he was in Florida), Jerry Warriner finds that Lucy is not home. She returns with a young man, her handsome young lawyer, Jerry, from a dance, they explain, their car broke down and they stayed overnight at an inn. Jerry will not believe that their accident was entirely innocent and, in the heat of their argument, Lucy reveals that she knows about his deception regarding his supposed business trip. They agree to divorce and Lucy takes the custody of their dog, Mr. Smith. Lucy meets and becomes interested in Dan Leeson, handsome young Oklahoma oil magnate, who gives her a rush. Jerry meanwhile, has secured a court order permitting him to see the dog, Mr. Smith, two hours each week. Lucy announces that she and Dan Leeson are engaged and will be married as soon as the divorce decree becomes final.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY.

Chapter Three

With their engagement settled, Lucy and Dan began a feverish round of theatres and night clubs. For Dan had never been to New York before and was anxious to do a thing. They wound up one night in one of the smaller clubs on Fifty-second Street and had barely been shown to their table when Jerry Warriner came and smiled down at them.

"It's a small world, isn't it?" he said. "Lucy, I want you to meet a little friend of mine." Jerry turned to the vivid, platinum-haired girl beside him. "This," he announced, "is Dan Leeson. Toots, this is my wife, Mrs. Warriner and this is Dan Leeson the man she's going to marry."

Toots smiled and tried not to appear too bewildered by the introduction. Jerry signaled the waiter to bring more champagne. "We'll stay for just one little drink," he beamed, "to celebrate your engagement."

"You-all can stay, sugar," Toots said. "I must be getting back for my number." She smiled at Lucy. "Ah work here you see, an' it's almost time for me to go on. I'll be back as soon as I've finished." Toots nodded brightly and hurried off.

"Charming girl, isn't she?" Lucy commented. "Does she sing well?" Dan asked. "Well, her singing isn't up to Lucy's," Jerry said gallantly. "But there's something more to Toots' work — a sort of elfin charm — I mean, if you see what I mean."

"I think I do," Dan said. "These Southern women have a sort of natural grace and Toots — I mean Miss Blinewanger — is —"

"Exactly," Jerry beamed. "But enough of Toots. Tell me about your own life. You're going to live in Oklahoma? How I envy you! Oklahoma!" Jerry closed his eyes ecstatically. "Lucy, your a lucky girl. Is it to be Oklahoma City?"

"Tulsa," Dan interposed. "Jerry was even more enthusiastic. 'Ah, Tulsa. Peace at last, Lucy. Tulsa's kind and kind. No more knocking around from one night club to another of an evening, no miserable twining in New York shops. I shall think of you on every opening night and I shall say to myself, 'She's well out of it.'"

Leeson, unaware that Jerry was "ribbing" Lucy, nodded approvingly. "New York," he said, "is fine for a visit but —"

Jerry and Lucy joined in the chorus of laughter. "But I wouldn't want to live here," Dan looked at them, bewildered. Lucy turned to Jerry.

"I'm sure," she said, with exaggerated sweetness, "I shall enjoy living in Tulsa."

"Bay, I've just remembered," Dan interrupted. "Lucy's been telling me about that coal mine you and she own jointly. I'd like to buy your interest in that mine, Warriner."

"I don't know that I want to sell," Jerry replied. "I know that this isn't the place to talk about it," Dan continued, "but I'm extremely interested. Could you discuss it with me tomorrow?"

Toots smiled warmly in their direction. She was wearing the costume of a belle of the Civil War days with a little plumed hat, lace panties, hoop skirt and she carried a tiny parasol. Toots began her song in a small, sweet voice. At the end of the first chorus Toots removed her bonnet and tossed it with her parasol aside. She continued to sing and then, with another graceful movement, she stepped out of her dress, in top skirt and all. Jerry turned and smiled at Lucy.

"Cute, isn't she?" he asked and he started to applaud again. Toots turned toward their table — she was now wearing only a flimsiest of panties and a brassiere — and shook her finger reproachfully at Jerry.

"There," Jerry said triumphantly, "that's what I mean by elfin charm."

Dan, who had been watching the performance, again recovered his breath. His eyes were popping as he watched Toots. "Why never in all my born days," he began. "She can't possibly —"

"She can't, huh?" Jerry asked. "You watch!"

At that moment two burly, rough-looking men walked out on the floor. "Hold it, sister," one of them said.

"Oh — oh!" Jerry shook his head. "The voice of the law."

As the detectives led the protesting Toots from the floor Lucy turned and smiled sweetly at Jerry. "What ever will you do with the next sixty days?" she asked.

"Don't worry about me," he assured her. "I'll do all right."

The next afternoon Jerry met with Lucy and Dan Leeson, as he had promised, to discuss the sale of their coal mine. They had not been talking long when they were joined by Leeson's mother, an austere, forbidding looking woman obviously bending every effort to improve her social prestige. This afternoon she was wearing a black dress and a high collar.

When she had been introduced to Jerry she turned to her son, questioning.

"Warriner?" she asked. "Did you say Warriner?"

Dan nodded and looked slightly uncomfortable.

"But isn't that Lucy's name, also?"

"Yes, Mother," Dan explained patiently. "This is Lucy's — er — former husband. We're discussing a business proposition."

Mrs. Leeson turned to Jerry. "I'm very glad to meet you, young man," she said. "I had tea today with some people who knew you both before your divorce. They spoke very well of you," she added significantly. Then she turned to Lucy.

"There was a woman at this tea, Lucy," she said, "who stated rather bluntly that Mr. Warriner here played a gentleman's role in parting with you to divorce him. Do you understand what I mean?"

"Whoopie!" Jerry exclaimed. "Some one thinks I'm a gentleman."

"I'm sure Mr. Warriner will welcome the opportunity to blast the silly story I heard this afternoon," Mrs. Leeson said. "Briefly, it is this: A woman said that Mr. Warriner permitted you, Lucy, to divorce him so that your reputation wouldn't be ruined. It had something to do with an episode involving a handsome voice teacher."

Mrs. Leeson sighed with relief. "I'm so glad to hear you say that," she said. "I assumed Lucy's character was above reproach but, considering the prestige of the Leeson name in Tulsa, I just had to ask you."

Jerry smiled understandingly. "You were perfectly right," he agreed. "A person can't be too careful — especially in Tulsa. Well, I must be off." Jerry said his farewells and Lucy showed him to the door.

"Jerry you were marvelous," Lucy whispered under her breath. "Thank you."

Jerry winked at her maliciously. "Finest bit of perfidy I've done in years," he muttered. "By the way, how is Armand Leveille?"

Lucy slammed the door shut and Jerry went whistling down the corridor.

The Nicest Santa Claus

BY BLANCHE TANNER DILLIN

AS SHE sat watching the fading winter sunset Martha Weeks could hear the kitten crying at the front door. Every day for a week it had been at one of the doors crying to be taken in. It was a cute little thing with its white body and black feet and tail. But Martha couldn't have it tracking mud into the house. Besides, what would she do with it when she went away? For it would be foolish to refuse the offer to return to her old position from which she had resigned last spring.

It was at that time that she returned to her old home. Her agent had written of numerous necessary repairs, so Martha had decided to see for herself what those necessary repairs were.

When she saw the condition of the house and grounds, she concluded the only thing to do was to take over the work herself; find someone to help with both inside and outside work; even give up her position if necessary. It was time she was showing more love for the place; she had neglected it entirely too long. From now on she would try hard to prove worthy of her heritage. She would attempt to restore the order and beauty that had been there in former years.

All spring and summer she and her companion worked tirelessly and lovingly inside the house, painting and sewing, and outside planting and transplanting, while workmen did the heavier work. Many asked would she ever get out what she had put into it? Martha felt she was even now getting much out of it through seeing order and beauty taking the place of disorder and neglect. That her work had borne fruit was proved by many stopping to add a word of praise and those whose admiring glances were sufficient in themselves. If one of those would admire it enough to rent it.

There wasn't much time left—she must report for work the first of the year and Christmas just a week away. How many wonderfully happy times she had had in this house at Christmas. How gay the house always was with holiday decorations. A wreath here, a rope of pine or tinsel there, here another wreath—and now the little evergreen on each side of the front step would make beautiful outdoor Christmas trees. She opened the door to look at the trees. "Meow," the kitten greeted her. Martha hesitated, then picked it up and stepped back into the house. Once inside, the kitten bounded out of her arms, looked around the room, then selected a bright orange cushion on which to take a nap. Martha's hearty laugh brought Hilda Gray, her companion, into the room. "Behold our new tenant," Martha indicated the peacefully slumbering kitten.

"He certainly looks as though he had decided to stay."

The sound of the knocker sent Martha hastening to open the door. The man standing on the steps asked if she was Miss Weeks. Martha gave an affirmative answer and invited him to step inside. He was the manager of the iron mill across the river and he was looking for a home for his family. He had been interested in the place ever since he first saw it, and today when he saw the kitten standing before the door he felt he just must have the house. Some one had told him that she would rent it. He hoped she would let him have the house and the kitten. The house was so like a real home and his little daughter would love the cat as she had had one just like it. He had promised her another one and if he could have the house before Christmas, he could have his family with him for the holidays, and he could give the kitten to his little girl for a Christmas gift. Satisfactory terms were soon arranged and later Martha told the kitten:

"You are quite the nicest Santa Claus I ever saw, although a queer one. And to think I almost turned you away."

And he said unto me, Take it, and eat it up; and it shall make thy belly bitter, but it shall be in thy mouth sweet as honey." (Revelation 10: 1, 2, 9).

Romans Classed Greatest Ancient Bridge Builders

The Romans were the greatest bridge builders of ancient times.

Although bridges spring from the demands of commerce, Romans built them for conquest. And when their empire fell, so did the science of bridge building.

War revived that science on a grand scale, too, says a writer in the Washington Post. Napoleon may command respect or condemnation as a military glory-seeker, but he needed bridges in his business. So bridges were built.

Yet, some spans came between the Romans and Napoleon. For instance, there was the old stone London bridge. Its distinguishing feature was the houses and shops bordering its roadway. These were of wood, regularly burned down with terrible loss of life, and were just as regularly re-erected.

Railroads, coming along in the 1830's, took up where Napoleon left off. Then came the first all-iron bridge. Scottish engineers developed this type with a span in Glasgow in 1841, and a mistake of Scottish engineers signaled the passing of large iron bridges.

The mistake was in not allowing for the force of wind in throwing up the Tay bridge. In 1879, two years after its completion, the crossing was swept away in a storm. A train on the bridge was hurled into the river, carrying about 100 people to their deaths.

When Swedes Bowed

Nations, like styles, change. At the beginning of the Eighteenth century when Peter the Great became ruler of Russia, Sweden was among the first in military power in Europe and when Peter first beat the Swedes in battle his success gave him unbounded joy. "We beat the Swedes," he said, "because we have first double the number of soldiers, and we will learn to beat them with numbers."
